

Duncan MacMillan

Duncan J. MacMillan is an active solo pianist, harpsichordist and chamber musician and composer. In addition to playing the standard repertoire, he has premiered works by many composers - some written or commissioned especially for him. His compositions have been commissioned, recorded & performed internationally, and have been featured on NPR. He teaches piano, harpsichord and music history at The University of Tampa and has served on the Artist Faculty of The University of Tampa Summer Piano Camps. He also lectures in Music and Ancient Greek Studies at Eckerd College and has maintained a private piano studio since 1977. Dr. MacMillan holds two BA degrees magna cum laude (in psychology and music performance), a Certificate in Piano & Pedagogy, and two Master of Music degrees (in piano and music theory) from the Florida State University. A member of Phi Beta Kappa, Pi Kappa Lambda, and Phi Mu Alpha, he received his Doctor of Musical Arts degree in Piano & Literature from the University of Oklahoma after studies on doctoral scholarship in baroque music history and literature at Oxford University.
