

Macdonald-Kelce Library

Institutional Repository

An Institutional Repository (IR) is a type of open access archive where digital copies of student and faculty work are collected, indexed, and preserved. A university repository functions as a central location where scholarship is freely accessible to the campus community and/or to the world.

The University of Tampa Institutional Repository

The University of Tampa Institutional Repository is a digital service that collects, preserves, and distributes the intellectual output of the UT community. Our repository is an important tool for preserving UT's legacy, while promoting the University's scholarship around the world.

Check out this guide to learn how the new University of Tampa Institutional Repository can help to support faculty scholarship through open access and archiving pre- and post-prints and other intellectual work. Showcasing faculty and student work increases UT's visibility to prospective colleagues, students, funders and other stakeholders. For general information about library resources for faculty, staff and alumni, visit the Macdonald-Kelce Library.